

PATRIOTS, PIONEERS AND PRESIDENTS

STORIES of the SCOTCH-IRISH FROM ULSTER TO AMERICA

POCKET TRAIL MAP including 26 PLACES TO VISIT

The Red Hand and shield motif on the cover of The Lancers: A Tale of the Western Emigration of 1781, by Rev. Henry C. McCook (Philadelphia, 1886)

OVER THE CENTURIES, many hundreds of thousands of Ulster-Scots (also known as the Scotch-Irish or Scots-Irish) have left these shores. Today, thousands of people return to this island every year in search of their Ulster-Scots roots.

This pocket history tells the stories of a number of Ulster-Scots individuals and families in America and the great diversity of their experiences. Inside you will find information on places in Ulster that you can visit and discover at first hand the stories of some of those who left these shores to begin a new life on the other side of the Atlantic.

Discover Scotch-Irish
Discover yourself www.DiscoverScotchIrish.com

"Ye have seen what I did to the Egyptians and how I bore you on eagle's wings and brought you to myself."
Exodus chapter 19, verse 4

This was said to have inspired the name of the first Ulster-Scots emigrant ship, the Eagle Wing, which set sail in 1636

INTRODUCTION

The Scotch-Irish are the backbone of the United States. Their deeds have shaped the nation, from the Declaration of Independence to the moon landing and beyond. They have provided leadership out of all proportion to their numbers, whether as politicians, soldiers, business people, inventors or clergy. Seventeen out of forty-four Presidents of the United States could claim Scotch-Irish roots.

The contribution of the Scotch-Irish goes far beyond famous deeds and names; however, it is their character and eagerness to leave their homes that has had the greatest impact, for they have literally defined what it is to be an American.

It must be remembered however, that the fundamental character of the Scotch-Irish was forged not in America, but in Ulster where they are known as Ulster-Scots. The people who set out to the American Colonies had first secured the borders of Ulster. The people who denied the right of a King to levy taxes without representation had already denied the right of a King to tell them how to worship. The people who refused to surrender at the Alamo were the same people who were "No Surrender", when they held out against the odds, at the last stage of Londonderry in 1688. The people who pushed over the mountain, opening up the American continent, had first set out from Scotland to Ulster and then from Ulster to America.

Follow the Patriots, Pioneers and Presidents trail to discover what made the Scotch-Irish who they are. Visit their ancestral townlands and the places that they knew well, round the historic walls of Londonderry that they defended; and stand in the quays where they boarded their ships to America.

www.discoverscotchirish.com

1 FROM ULSTER TO AMERICA

The Ulster-Scots have always been a transatlantic people. Our first attempted emigration was in 1636 when Eagle Wing sailed from Droopspoint for New England, but was forced back by bad weather. It was 1718 when over 100 families from the Bann and Foyle river valleys successfully reached New England in what can be regarded as the first organised migration to bring families to the New World.

By this time significant numbers of families were also moving to Pennsylvania, which would become the main focus of Ulster emigration for decades. In time the settlement of Ulster families became significant in other areas of the Colonies, including Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia. While all religious denominations were represented in the migration stream, Presbyterians were by far the most numerous throughout the 1700s.

If the numbers emigrating from Ulster to America in the 1700s were impressive – perhaps in the region of 120,000–180,000 – these are dwarfed by the figures for the 19th century when possibly as many as 1.5 million people left the province for North America. While the destination for many of these migrants was Canada, a clear majority ended up in the United States. Emigration in this period was more religiously and culturally diverse and no one grouping dominated the outflow of families. Having said that, proportionately, the transatlantic migration of Ulster-Scots in the 1800s remained hugely significant, while numerically it was far greater than in the previous century.

The factors accounting for emigration from Ulster to America have been numerous and complex. The numbers of people crossing the Atlantic has not been constant, with variations depending on economic conditions in Ireland, for instance, as well as other external factors. Chain migration was hugely significant as emigrants followed the routes taken by family members and neighbours from home who had gone before. The story of the relationship between Ulster and America comes right down to the present as the United States continues to hold out the prospect of opportunities for those ready to seize them.

5 FIRST-GENERATION PRESIDENTS

Only four first-generation Americans have been President of the United States. The first three were the sons of Ulster-born fathers (two had Ulster-born mothers), and the fourth, Barack Obama, claims Scotch-Irish descent through his grandparents.

The parents of Andrew Jackson (1767–1845) left Boneybore, near Carrickfergus, in 1765, emigrating to America. Jackson's father died shortly before he was born in 1767 and he was raised in modest circumstances in the Waxhaws, on the border between North and South Carolina. He went on to become a successful lawyer and businessman in Nashville, Tennessee, and was a celebrated war hero, defeating the British at New Orleans in 1815. He served as President from 1829 to 1837, and was the first holder of that office not to have come from a privileged background. Though a highly controversial figure, not least because of his treatment of Native Americans, his impact on America was such that the period of his presidency and many years after it was known as the 'Age of Jackson'.

The father of James Buchanan (1791–1868), James Buchanan senior, was born at Low Cairn, Ramelton, County Donegal, in 1761. He was raised at Stony Bator, a few miles from Ramelton, on the farm that was owned by his mother's family, the Russells. The homestead still stands, though in ruins. James Buchanan senior emigrated to America in 1783 and his son, the future president, was born in 1791 at the property in Pennsylvania that he called Stony Bator after his Donegal home. Buchanan was President on the eve of the Civil War. It is said that he once remarked, 'My Ulster blood is my most precious heritage'.

In 1815 the father of Chester A. Arthur (1829–86) left Droon, Cullybackey, County Antrim, for America. Born in Vermont and raised in New York state, he was elected Vice-President in 1880. Following the assassination of President Garfield in 1881, he succeeded to the presidency. On 4 July 1884 a 'Scotch-Irish Presbyterian Reunion' was held in St Enoch's Church in Belfast. During the reunion a message was sent to President Arthur extending to him the good wishes of those gathered. In reply Arthur wrote, 'Coming from kindred ancestry the kind greetings of the Scotch-Irish assembled at Belfast today are especially pleasing, and are very cordially reciprocated'.

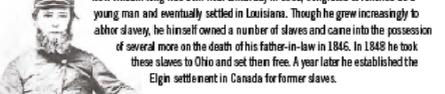

10 REFORMERS AND PHILANTHROPISTS

Within the ranks of America's leading philanthropists was a number of Ulster-Scots. Among those who made an outstanding contribution to the betterment of their fellow citizens was Eschel Dorell, born at Ballee, Strabane, County Tyrone, in 1822. Dorell initially settled in Alabama before moving to New York and was a hugely successful cotton merchant. A strong believer in the importance of education, he gave $1m towards the building of a library in New York, which would be open to the public, free of charge.

Samuel Robinson (1865–1958) was born near Cloughmills, County Antrim, and emigrated to Philadelphia in 1888, going into the grocery business. He went on to become president of the American Stores Co., formed in 1917, which was reckoned to be the largest food retailer in the world. Robinson used his vast wealth to support a broad range of causes. These included scholarships for Presbyterians to attend academic institutions with Presbyterian associations. He provided the funds to construct and equip a hospital in Ballymoney – the Robinson Memorial Hospital, which opened in 1933 and was named in memory of his parents.

While it would be wrong to give the impression that Ulster-Scots were uniformly hostile to slavery – many of them did own slaves – it is true that Ulster-Scots were frequently to the fore in anti-slavery movements. For example, the Reformed Presbyterian Church in the United States, which was largely drawn from Ulster settlers, maintained a consistent line that no slaveholder could be a member of the denomination. Many members of this Church were involved in the Underground Railroad which helped runaway slaves escape to Canada, including Rev. Armour McFarland, a native of Plumbridge in County Tyrone, who sheltered fugitive slaves in a secret room under the front steps of his house.

Rev. William King was born near Limavady in 1812, emigrated to America as a young man and eventually settled in Louisiana. Though he grew increasingly to abhor slavery, he himself owned a number of slaves and came into the possession of several more on the death of his father-in-law in 1846. In 1848 he took these slaves to Ohio and set them free. A year later he established the Elgin settlement in Canada for former slaves.

2 ULSTER-SCOTS AND COLONIAL AMERICA

Ulster-Scots played key roles in the settlement, administration and defence of Colonial America.

James Logan (1674–1751) of Lurgan, County Armagh, worked closely with the Penn family in the development of Pennsylvania, encouraging many Ulster families, whom he believed well suited to frontier life, to settle there.

Arthur Dobbs (1689–1765) was a landowner and politician from County Antrim. He purchased 400,000 acres in North Carolina and organised ships to carry hundreds of settlers from Ulster. Writing in 1755, he described them as, "a Colony from Ireland removed from Pennsylvania of what we call Scotch-Irish Presbyterians who with others in the neighboring Tracts had settled together in order to have... a minister of their own opinion and choice." Dobbs served as Governor of North Carolina from 1753 to 1765.

Robert Rogers (1731–95) founded an elite military unit, Rogers' Rangers, during the French and Indian War (1754–63) that is regarded as the forerunner of America's elite forces. The modern US Army Rangers were 'activated' at Carrickfergus, County Antrim, in 1942 and a modified version of Rogers' 28 Rules for Ranging is still in use today. Rogers' father named his New Hampshire property Munterlonny, after the district his family came from in the Sperrin Mountains of County Tyrone. On 24 April 1778, the USS Ranger, captained by John Paul Jones, scored a historic victory by capturing a British warship, HMS Drake, off the coast of Carrickfergus, County Antrim.

Alexander Montgomery (d. 1800) of Conroy, County Donegal, served as a captain in the 43rd Foot during the French and Indian War. He earned a reputation for ruthlessness and is said to have killed his commanding officer in a duel. He returned to Ireland after the war and in 1768 was elected MP for County Donegal, holding this seat in every subsequent election until his death in 1800. He was a strong supporter of the American colonists, earning him the nickname 'Americanus'.

6 OTHER PRESIDENTS

One of the most highly regarded Presidents, Woodrow Wilson was born in the Presbyterian manse in Staunton, Virginia, and grew up very conscious of his Scotch-Irish ancestry. He once said, "The stern Covenanters tradition that is behind me sends many a echo down the years." On another occasion, with some humour, he remarked, "No one who amounts to anything is without some Scotch-Irish blood." His grandfather is thought to have been from Dergalt, near Strabane.

Though much happier as a soldier than a politician, Ulysses Simpson Grant followed the path of many a war hero in becoming President, serving from 1869 to 1877. Grant's Irish ancestry was through his maternal line. The Simpson family farmed for generations at Dergnagh, near Ballygawley, County Tyrone.

Vice-President to Abraham Lincoln, Andrew Johnson succeeded the assassinated president in 1865. His ancestors are said to have been from the Mourntill/Valoo area of County Antrim. The last Civil War veteran to serve as president, William McKinley's ancestors emigrated from Conagher, near Ballymoney, County Antrim, around 1743. He was assassinated in 1901 in the first year of his second presidential term. He was succeeded by Theodore Roosevelt whose ancestors are said to have been Invinies, Craigs and Bullocks from Gleno area of County Antrim.

Richard Nixon had several lines of Ulster ancestry and his Whitehouse forebears are believed to have lived in Carrickfergus for a time. An 18th-century ancestor of Jimmy Carter, Andrew Cowan, was possibly from County Antrim, while George Bush also had an 18th-century ancestor, William Gault, possibly from the same county. Bill Clinton claimed to have Cassidy ancestors from County Fernagh. While visiting Belfast in 1995, Clinton declared: 'I am proud to be of Ulster-Scots stock'.

Several other names have Ulster roots, though it has not been possible to identify a specific location in Ulster for their forebears. The ancestors of James K. Polk may have been from County Londonderry and emigrated to America in the early 18th century. Grover Cleveland's maternal grandfather, Abner Neal, emigrated from County Antrim in late 1700s. Benjamin Harrison also had forebears of Ulster ancestry (Irwin and McDowells).

11 BUSINESS AND COMMERCE

Many Ulster-Scots contributed to the commercial development of America. A largely forgotten figure is Oliver Pollock (1737–1823), who was born in the Bredry area of County Tyrone, and emigrated to America in 1760. He became involved in business which eventually took him to New Orleans where he became one of the most prosperous merchants in America.

Pollock used his wealth to finance the activities of the American Revolutionaries in the Mississippi Valley, an important but little known campaign. It is reckoned that he spent the modern equivalent of $1 billion of his own money on the war effort. Perhaps even more remarkably, Pollock is credited with inventing the dollar sign ($), one of the most recognisable symbols in the world.

Alexander Brown (1764–1834) was born in Ballymena and emigrated to Baltimore in 1800, founding the Irish Linen Warehouse. His business interests expanded and in his lifetime his company became the second largest foreign exchange dealer in America – behind the Second Bank of the United States.

Alexander Turney Stewart (1803–76) from Lisson, near Lisburn, emigrated to America in his youth and went into business in New York, opening what is considered to be the first department store in the world – the 'Great Iron Store'. He was also responsible for the development of Garden City on Long Island. Another Lisburn man who made a significant contribution to business in America was the railroad magnate Samuel (Sam) Sloan (1817–1907), described as 'one of the monarchs of the land... the actual ruler of the United States'. Sloan was also a founder of what is now Citibank.

In 1810 Andrew and Rebecca Mellon left Castleblonk, near Omagh (now the location of the Ulster American Folk Park), with their 11-year-old son Thomas to join the Mellons already settled in Pennsylvania. Thomas Mellon (1813–85) went on to have a successful career in banking and the family became one of the wealthiest in America. His son Andrew William was Secretary to the Treasury from 1921 to 1932 and founded the National Gallery of Art in Washington DC.

3 THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

The Ulster-Scots/Scotch-Irish contribution to the Patriot cause in the events leading up to and including the American War of Independence was immense. Probably born in County Donegal, Rev. Charles Cummings (1752–1812), a Presbyterian minister in south-western Virginia, is believed to have drafted the Fincastle Resolutions of January 1775, which have been described as the first statement in the Colonies promising armed resistance to the Crown.

The signatories of the 1776 Declaration of Independence included three men who had been born in Ulster: George Taylor, born in County Antrim, in 1716; James Smith, who emigrated to America as a boy around 1716; and Matthew Thornton, who was born in the Bann Valley straddling counties Antrim and Londonderry, around 1714.

Two other signatories were the sons of Ulster immigrants: Thomas McKean, whose father was from the Ballymena area of County Antrim; and Edward Rutledge, who was born in County Tyrone. In addition, John Hancock, whose flowing signature has gone down in history, is believed to have had County Down ancestors.

The Declaration of Independence was printed in Philadelphia by John Dunlap (1746–1812) from Strabane, County Tyrone. Aged 10 he had emigrated to Pennsylvania to work as an apprentice printer to his uncle William Dunlap, and in 1766 John took the business over. John founded the Pennsylvania Packet in 1771, which later became America's first daily newspaper. During this time he actively encouraged commercial advertising, placing adverts in specific locations on the page and introducing illustrations and engravings to help draw the reader's eye to the advert.

The printed version of the Declaration of Independence included two names – those of John Hancock and Charles Thomson (1719–1824). Thomson was born at Upperlands, near Maghera in County Londonderry, and arrived in America in 1739 as an orphan. He went on to become one of Philadelphia's leading citizens and was Secretary to the Continental Congress throughout its existence from 1774 to 1789. He also designed the Great Seal of the United States.

7 PIONEERS AND ADVENTURERS

Families of Ulster birth or descent contributed to the westward expansion of America. At the birth of the new United States they were one of the dominant groups in the interior of the new Republic. Famous pioneers such as Davy Crockett, Sam Houston, Jim Bowie and Daniel Boone were all of Ulster-Scots descent.

While most famed, some worked as fur traders, such as James Adair (d. 1783), who is believed to have been from County Antrim. In 1775 he published, The History of the American Indians, in which he demonstrated a keen awareness of the Native American way of life. The recent film, The Revenant, is based on an incident in the Red Hand Glass (d. 1833), a Scotch-Irish fur trader and explorer. William Clark of the Lewis and Clark expedition that began in 1804 was Scotch-Irish, as were some of the others on the expedition.

The contribution of Ulster-Scots to the founding and development of new towns and settlements can be observed in numerous locations in America. Taking Nashville, Tennessee, as an example, both of the men credited with founding the modern city, James Robertson and John Donelson, are reputed to have sprung from families originating in east County Antrim. According to one source, Donelson was from the Commonage area. Robertson's Antrim associations are less certain. However, it is clear from what we know of the earliest inhabitants of Nashville that there was a very strong Scotch-Irish element to the population and businessmen with Ulster connections contributed greatly to its development.

Bringing the story up to more recent times, Ulster-Scots pioneers have made it as far as the moon. Colonel James B. Irwin flew on the Apollo 15 mission in 1971. This fourth manned lunar mission was distinguished by the first utilisation of the famous lunar rover. Irwin's grandparents came from Altmore and Tarnabrown, Pomeroy, County Tyrone. In September 1979 Col. Irwin travelled to Northern Ireland to make a personal visit to his ancestral home.

12 MANUFACTURERS AND INDUSTRIALISTS

In manufacturing we find that Ulster-Scots made their mark, and in ways that can still be seen today. Born near Enniskillen, James Gamble (1803–91) emigrated with his family to America in 1819, settling in Cincinnati. Apprenticed to a soap-maker, he subsequently established his own business.

In 1837 Gamble formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, William Procter, a candle-maker. It is said that their father-in-law encouraged the two men to consider working together. The company, Procter & Gamble, has gone on to become one of the most successful firms of its kind in world history.

The opening up of the American Midwest provided many opportunities for manufacturers, especially those in the meat-processing business. Samuel Kingan (1824–1911), who was from near Ballynahinch, County Down, founded Kingan & Co. In 1852 and had factories in Brooklyn and Cincinnati. After both of these burned down, a plant was opened in Indianapolis in 1862. This facility adopted the most advanced manufacturing techniques and pioneered the use of refrigeration. In the 1860s members of the Smoliar family of Belfast expanded their pork processing business to America, initially to New York and later to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where one of the world's largest meat-packing plants was established. In 1875 the Kingan and Smoliar businesses merged.

A native of Ramelton, Charles Knox (1817–95) founded in New York City what became the largest hat manufacturing company in the world. Among the many customers of the Knox Hat Company were more than 20 US Presidents. Abraham Lincoln's well-known 'stovepipe' hat was made by the firm.

Francis Torrance (1816–85), born near Letterkenny, County Donegal, into a family that traced its ancestry to Kirkintilloch, Scotland, established the Standard Manufacturing Co. in Pittsburgh in 1875, which pioneered the development and manufacture of plumbing and sanitation goods. Under his son, also named Francis, the business, renamed the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co., became the world's largest producer of sanitation products.

4 THE WAR OF INDEPENDENCE

The Ulster-Scots/Scotch-Irish played important roles in the military aspects of the War of Independence. General Richard Montgomery was the descendant of a Scottish cleric who moved to County Donegal in the 1600s. At a later stage the family acquired an estate at Conroy in this county. Montgomery fought for the Revolutionaries and was killed at the Battle of Quebec in 1775.

Another Donegal man, also the descendant of a Scottish minister, to make his mark on the War of Independence was Gustavus Conyngham who was the most successful captain in the Continental Navy, capturing 24 ships in one 12-month period alone.

Born near Newtown Stewart, County Tyrone, William Maxwell emigrated to America with his father in the 1740s and settled in New Jersey. During the War of Independence, he served with distinction and rose to the rank of brigadier-general. Because of his ancestry and accent, he was known to his men as 'Scotch Will'.

Two of George Washington's closest associates during the war were Henry Knox and James McHenry. Knox, the son of an immigrant from Londonderry, became one of the most senior officers in the Continental Army – in fact, the most senior officer for a 6-month period in 1783–4 – and was the first Secretary of War in the new United States. Knoxville, Tennessee, was one of several towns named in his honor, as was Fort Knox in Kentucky. Born in Ballymena, McHenry emigrated to America just a few years before the outbreak of the War of Independence. He became secretary and aide to George Washington in 1778. In 1796 he too was appointed Secretary of War. Fort McHenry in Baltimore was named for him.

The divided loyalties of some Ulster-Scots during the War of Independence are reflected in the life of Alexander Chesney (1755–1843). Born near Ballymena, he emigrated to America in 1772 and settled in South Carolina. From 1776 to 1779 he fought for the Patriot cause. However, in 1780 he switched sides and fought for the British until 1782, after which he returned to Ireland and lived most of the rest of his long life at Anneling, County Down.

8 PRESBYTERIANS AND PREACHERS

The Ulster-Scots/Scotch-Irish contribution to religious life in America, especially across the various strands of Presbyterianism, has been immense. As far as Presbyterianism is concerned, it could be argued that settlers from Ulster made the key contribution. The distribution of Presbyterian churches has even been used as an indicator of westward expansion.

Donegal-born Francis Makemie, emigrated to Maryland in 1683. In 1706, he was instrumental in founding the first presbytery in America and has become known as the 'Father of American Presbyterianism'. Presbyterian ministers from Ulster made a significant contribution to the movement of Ulster-Scots families to America. As the natural leaders of their communities they were often the drivers of emigration. Examples include Rev. James McGregor of Aghadown, County Londonderry, in 1718; Rev. Thomas Clark, minister of Cahans Presbyterian Church, County Monaghan, in 1764 and the Covenanter Rev. William Martin, who led large numbers of Covenanter families to South Carolina in 1772.

The migration of ministers from Ulster to America continued in the 19th and 20th centuries. Rev. Thomas Campbell (1763–1854), was minister of Aherny in County Armagh, before emigrating to America and founding what became the Disciples of Christ denomination. Rev. Dr John Hall (1829–98), who was born in Ballymoney, Loughilly parish, County Antrim, served the Presbyterian Church in Ireland for more than a decade (in the cities of Armagh and Dublin), before, in 1867, becoming minister of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York City. In 1889 he was one of the founders of the Scotch-Irish Society of America.

Over the centuries Scotch-Irish people became Baptists, Methodists and other denominations and made a great contribution to all of them, and still do to this day.

13 NOVELISTS, JOURNALISTS AND HISTORIANS

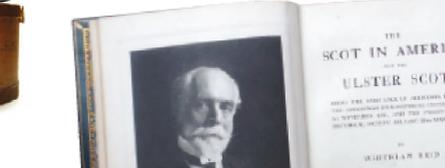

Some of America's leading writers have been Ulster-Scots / Scotch-Irish. From Edgar Allan Poe and Mark Twain to John Steinbeck and Stephen King, their work has spanned multiple genres and has defined the story of America.

David Ramsay (1749–1815), the son of parents from Ulster, possibly County Donegal, has been called the 'father of American historical writing'. Among his many works was History of the American Revolution (1789), in which he was able to draw on his own personal experience of the events about which he was writing, and The History of the United States (1816–17).

One of the most successful novelists of his day was Thomas Mayne Reid (1818–83). The son of the minister of Ballymoney Presbyterian Church, County Down, he emigrated to America and while in Philadelphia befriended Edgar Allan Poe, himself of Ulster ancestry. Reid was a prolific writer of adventure novels. Donegal-born John Wallace 'Captain Jack' Crawford became an adventure, famous preform poet and master storyteller. These romantic depictions of life on the range kindled America's love affair with the Wild West.

A largely forgotten literary figure is James McHenry (1785–1845), a native of Lame, who is considered the first Irish-American novelist. In 1817 he emigrated to America, eventually settling in Philadelphia where he was the founding editor of the American Monthly Magazine. In 1842 McHenry was appointed US Consul in Londonderry, bringing him back to Ireland, and he died in his hometown of Lame.

The New York Tribune was founded by 'the conscience of America', Horace Greeley, whose ancestors, the Woodburns, moved from Ulster to New England in the early 18th century. Of them, he wrote 'whose store of Scottish and Scotch-Irish traditions, songs, anecdotes, shreds of history &c, can have rarely been equalled.' After Greeley's death the newspaper was purchased by Whitlaw Reid, the descendant of immigrants from Tyrone, who was US Ambassador to France (1889–92) and the United Kingdom (1905–12). In April 1912 he visited Belfast to give a lecture on 'The Scot in America and the Ulster Scot'.

14 ULSTER PLACE-NAMES

Settlers from Ulster frequently named their new homes after the places they had left behind. Since 1788 Ulster place-names have been applied to farms, townships, villages, counties, towns and cities all over America.

For example, when the McFarland family moved in Maine in 1718 they called their new home Somerset as it reminded them of Somerset on the River Bann in Ulster. Alexander Porter (d. 1833), who is credited with having helped to build much of downtown Nashville, named his house there 'Tommy Woods'. Porter was a native of County Donegal, growing up on the family farm at Tannawood, near Ballintrair.

Londonderry and Derry appear with regularity in those areas where Ulster-Scots settled in some numbers. This was a reflection not only of the city as a place of origin of many emigrants and as an important port of departure, but also of the symbolic value of Londonderry as the city that had withstood the siege of 1689. Arguably the best known Londonderry in America is the settlement established in New Hampshire by migrants from the Bann Valley. Originally known as Nutfield, the name of this settlement was changed to Londonderry in 1722. Many of the early families in this Londonderry had been involved in one way or another in the siege, including their minister, Rev. James McGregor.

In relatively recent times, a number of myths have become erroneously attached to the term Scotch-Irish. The first is that the name was only adopted in the late 1800s as a means to differentiate Protestant migrants from Ireland from the thousands of Catholic Irish who migrated to America during the potato famine of 1845–52. This is obviously false, as the term Scotch-Irish had already been in use for 150 years before the potato famine happened. The second is that the term Scotch relates not to a people, but to an alcoholic beverage. However this is another mistaken notion, the result of Twentieth Century drink marketing. The term Scotch is used in Ulster to describe people from Scotland to this day.

9 SCHOOLS, COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Educational establishments across America owe their origins to Ulster-Scots. The College of New Jersey was founded in 1746 by Presbyterians who wanted to train ministers dedicated to their views. The college has since been called the educational and religious capital of Scotch-Irish America. In 1896 it was renamed Princeton University.

Princeton's origins have been traced to the 'Log College' which was founded at Newsham, Pennsylvania, by Rev. William Tennent. A native of Linnithgowshire, Scotland, Tennent had moved to America and married a daughter of Rev. Gilbert Kennedy of Duncaldin, County Down, before emigrating to America in the 1710s.

In 1761 Rev. Samuel Finley from County Antrim became principal of the College of New Jersey. He was awarded an honorary doctorate by Glasgow University, the first Presbyterian minister in America to be acknowledged in this way by a European university. His great-grandson was the inventor Samuel Morse.

Francis Pickens (1796–79) was born into a Presbyterian family near Letterkenny, County Donegal. He received his higher education in Scotland, and was deeply influenced by the views of Francis Hutcheson, an Ulster-Scot from Sandfield, County Down, who held the Chair of Moral Philosophy at Glasgow University. Alison emigrated to America in 1735 where he was ordained a Presbyterian minister. He was also an excellent teacher and has been called the 'greatest classical scholar in America'. Among his pupils was Charles Thomson, the future Secretary of the Continental Congress. Alison's ideas are regarded as having a profound influence on political thought in America.

In 1861 William Barton Rogers, the son of Omagh parents, founded Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In 1889 Agnes Scott College was founded in Georgia, named after a New York woman. The Scotch-Irish also pioneered education for African-Americans. Rev. James McKim from Anahilt founded what would become Fisk University in Nashville, while Rev. John G. Fee founded Berea College in Kentucky.

14 ULSTER PLACE-NAMES

Settlers from Ulster frequently named their new homes after the places they had left behind. Since 1788 Ulster place-names have been applied to farms, townships, villages, counties, towns and cities all over America.

For example, when the McFarland family moved in Maine in 1718 they called their new home Somerset as it reminded them of Somerset on the River Bann in Ulster. Alexander Porter (d. 1833), who is credited with having helped to build much of downtown Nashville, named his house there 'Tommy Woods'. Porter was a native of County Donegal, growing up on the family farm at Tannawood, near Ballintrair.

Londonderry and Derry appear with regularity in those areas where Ulster-Scots settled in some numbers. This was a reflection not only of the city as a place of origin of many emigrants and as an important port of departure, but also of the symbolic value of Londonderry as the city that had withstood the siege of 1689. Arguably the best known Londonderry in America is the settlement established in New Hampshire by migrants from the Bann Valley. Originally known as Nutfield, the name of this settlement was changed to Londonderry in 1722. Many of the early families in this Londonderry had been involved in one way or another in the siege, including their minister, Rev. James McGregor.

In relatively recent times, a number of myths have become erroneously attached to the term Scotch-Irish. The first is that the name was only adopted in the late 1800s as a means to differentiate Protestant migrants from Ireland from the thousands of Catholic Irish who migrated to America during the potato famine of 1845–52. This is obviously false, as the term Scotch-Irish had already been in use for 150 years before the potato famine happened. The second is that the term Scotch relates not to a people, but to an alcoholic beverage. However this is another mistaken notion, the result of Twentieth Century drink marketing. The term Scotch is used in Ulster to describe people from Scotland to this day.

A small section of a Map of the State of Pennsylvania by James Phillips (1792), showing places called Londonderry, Caledon and Belfast. The rest of the map features places called Strabane, Donegal, Restwater, Lurgan, Letterkenny, Gomerston, Hamiltons, Mourntill,

PRESIDENTIAL HOMESTEADS

1) Andrew Jackson Cottage, Carrickfergus, Co. Antrim

The Andrew Jackson Cottage is housed in a mid 18th-century house at Boneybefore on the outskirts of Carrickfergus. The original Jackson home, from where Andrew Jackson's parents and older brothers left for America in 1765, was just a short distance away, but was demolished in the 19th century to make way for a railway line. The exhibition tells the story of the Jackson family and the life of the 7th President. In the grounds of the cottage is the US Rangers Centre, a museum dedicated to the first battalions of this elite American army unit which was first 'activated' in Carrickfergus in 1942.

2 Boneybefore, Carrickfergus, BT38 7EU

2) Grant Homestead, Ballygawley, Co. Tyrone

Ulysses S. Grant's ancestor in his maternal line, John Simpson, left the family farm at Dergenagh, near Ballygawley, around 1760. Today the ancestral homestead is open to the public. The exhibition tells Grant's life story, looking at the career of the Union hero of the Civil War who went on to become the 18th President. In 1879 Grant visited Ireland, stopping at a number of places, including Londonderry and Belfast. Afterwards he wrote, 'There are no more thrifty, self reliant & contented people in Europe today than the people of north Ireland'.

45 Dergenagh Road, Ballygawley, BT10 1TW

3) Arthur Cottage, Cullybackey, Co. Antrim

Located in the townland of Dreen at the western end of the village of Cullybackey, this cottage was the ancestral home of Chester A. Arthur, 21st President. In 1815 Arthur's father left Cullybackey for America. Chester was born in Vermont in 1829, the last president before Barack Obama to be a first-generation American. The thatched cottage has been carefully restored to reflect rural Ulster life of two centuries ago. The exhibition tells the story of the Arthur family and follows Arthur's life from childhood to the White House.

21a Dreen Road, Cullybackey, BT42 1EB

4) Wilson House, Strabane, Co. Tyrone

Dergalt, near Strabane, is said to have been the birthplace of James Wilson, whose grandson was Woodrow Wilson, the 28th President. The homestead, which was for many generations in the possession of the Wilson family, is now owned by the Ulster American Folk Park. It is fairly typical of the home of a Tyrone farming family of the 1800s. Whitewashed, it is thatched apart from a single upper room, which is slated.

28 Spout Road, Dergalt, Strabane, BT22 8NB

5) ULSTER AMERICAN FOLK PARK

The Ulster American Folk Park, near Omagh in County Tyrone, opened in 1976. The only building in its original location is the Mellon Homestead. In 1818 Andrew and Rebecca Mellon left here with their 9-year-old son Thomas to join the Mellons already settled in Pennsylvania.

They sailed from the port of Londonderry to St John's, New Brunswick, and from there to Baltimore, before travelling overland to western Pennsylvania. The Mellons went on to make their mark in America in banking, business and politics, and became one of the wealthiest families in the United States.

In August 1882 Thomas Mellon paid a return visit to the homestead. He afterwards wrote: 'I was at home again, and preferred to be left alone with my thoughts. My heart was full. There was no spot on the place or its surroundings which I did not remember and know where to find.'

Connecting the Old World and New World sections of the Folk Park is a reconstruction of an early 19th-century sailing ship, which provides an impression of the conditions in which migrants crossed the Atlantic. A reconstruction of the Mellons' first home in Pennsylvania, a single-room log cabin, is on display on the New World side of the Folk Park. Also on display is an exact replica of the 6-room, 2-storey house, subsequently built by the Mellon family.

Among the other buildings in the Folk Park is the Campbell House. Originally standing at Aughlathane to the east of Plumbridge in the Glensilly Valley, this substantial dwelling was built in 1786. Born here in 1804 was Robert Campbell who went on to have a career in America as a fur trader before settling in St Louis where he enjoyed success in business. His home in St Louis has been preserved as a museum.

The Mellon Centre for Migration Studies is located at the Folk Park. The Centre includes an extensive reference library and has been responsible for creating the Irish Emigration Database, which contains transcriptions of some 32,500 documents on all aspects of Irish emigration from the early 1700s to the 1900s.

2 Mellon Rd, Omagh, BT18 5DU www.umni.com/visit

OTHER SITES

6) Pogue's Entry Historical Cottage, Antrim, County Antrim

Located off Church Street, this was the childhood home of Alexander Irvine (1863-1941). After working in Scotland and then serving in the Royal Marines, Irvine emigrated to America in 1888 where he worked as a missionary, minister and campaigner for social justice. He was the author of My Lady of the Chimney Corner (1913), which tells us much about life in Antrim in the mid 19th century. In 1946 Irvine's ashes were buried in the churchyard adjoining Antrim Parish Church where his headstone may be seen.

Church Street, Antrim, BT41 4BA

7) Cahans, Co. Monaghan

Cahans Presbyterian Church was established around 1750, and was originally a Secession congregation. In 1751 Rev. Thomas Clark, from Paisley, was ordained its first minister. In May 1764 he led 300 Presbyterians, mainly from Cahans, to New York. In 1786 Clark relocated to South Carolina where he died in 1792. The former meeting house, rebuilt in the 19th century, has been restored. In the churchyard is an overgrown and crumbling vault that was erected by Clark to his wife who died in 1762.

Lisnavene, Ballybay, Co. Monaghan

8) Discover Ulster-Scots Centre, Belfast

The Corn Exchange in Victoria Street was built by a company of grain merchants and opened in 1852. It was described in 1855 as 'a substantial structure in the best Scotch stone and is regarded as one of the most elegant specimens of architecture in the town'. In 1859, a stone was held here to mark the centenary of the birth of Scottish poet Robert Burns. In 2014 the Corn Exchange became the Discover Ulster-Scots Centre. The exhibition highlights the contribution of Ulster-Scots individuals and families to the United States.

1-9 Victoria St, Belfast, BT1 3BA www.discoverulsterscots.com

9) Glenveagh Castle, County Donegal

A figure of some notoriety, John George Adair acquired a landholding in north Donegal in the late 1850s and built Glenveagh Castle on a spot overlooking Lough Beg. From the late 1860s Adair spent an increasing amount of time in the US where he became a major landowner. He financed the creation of the JA Ranch in Texas, which at its height extended to more than 1.3 million acres. Adair died in St Louis, Missouri, in 1885. Glenveagh is now in the care of the National Parks and Wildlife Service and open to the public.

Churchill, Letterkenny, County Donegal www.glenveaghnationalpark.ie

PATRIOTS, PIONEERS AND PRESIDENTS

STORIES of the SCOTCH-IRISH

FROM ULSTER TO AMERICA

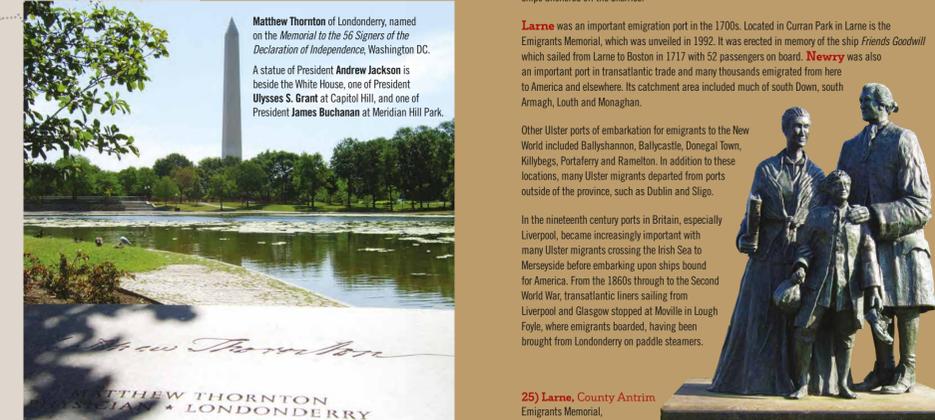

BLUE PLAQUES

Mainly through the efforts of the Ulster History Circle, a number of blue plaques have been erected across Ulster to individuals who for one reason or another deserve recognition for their contribution to story of the Ulster and America.

- 10) Groomsport, County Down
Now a picturesque seaside village, Groomsport is generally regarded as place from where the Eagle Wing set sail for America in the autumn of 1636 with 140 men, women and children on board. The ship had been built for a group of Presbyterian ministers who wanted to emigrate to New England where they hoped to enjoy religious freedom. They had written to the Puritans in New England and received an encouraging response. Frustratingly, the ship never made it to America. After 8 weeks at sea, severe storms forced the ship to return to Ireland.
Groomsport, Bangor, BT19 6IR
- 11) Martin Memorial, The Vow, Co. Antrim
In 1757 Rev. William Martin was ordained the first Reformed Presbyterian minister in Ireland at the Vow, near Ballymoney. In 1772 he led a major exodus of Covenanter families, mainly from County Antrim, to South Carolina at a time when unrest was threatening the stability of the north of Ireland. Something of a maverick, Martin won fame for his courage during the American War of Independence. In 2007 an inscribed memorial stone was erected close to the old graveyard in this townland, commemorating Martin's ordination and his subsequent emigration to America.
Vow Road, Ballymoney, BT53 7NU
- 12) Monreagh, County Donegal
The Monreagh Heritage Centre in County Donegal tells the story of the Ulster-Scots community in East Donegal over the centuries. There is a strong emphasis in the centre on the history of Presbyterianism in the region, and on the links between East Donegal and the wider world. Nearby in Taughboyne churchyard is the tombstone of Rev. William Boyd who was a leading figure in the story of the 1718 migration to New England. Boyd returned to Ireland in 1719 and in 1725 was ordained minister of Monreagh, remaining minister of this congregation until his death in 1772.
Monreagh, Carrigan, County Donegal www.monreaghulsterscotscentre.com
- 13) Ross Monument, Rostrevor, County Down
During the War of 1812, Major-General Robert Ross, whose family owned the Rostrevor estate, commanded the British forces that burned the White House in Washington DC in August 1814. A few weeks later Ross fell during an attack on Baltimore. Just outside Rostrevor is a tall obelisk (c. 100 feet in height) that was erected as a monument to General Ross in 1826. It was designed by the leading architect William Vitruvius Morrison and its inscription pays tribute to Ross's military successes.
Warrenpoint Road, Rostrevor, BT34 3EB

- JAMES MCGREGOR 1677-1729
- JAMES HOLMES 1753-1832
- THOMAS STONEWALL JACKSON 1824-1863
- OLIVER POLLOCK 1737-1823
- ROBERT ADRAIN 1775-1843
- JAMES BUCHANAN 1791-1868
- 14) Aghadowey, Co. Londonderry
A blue plaque on Aghadowey Presbyterian Church commemorates Rev. James McGregor, who, in 1718, led part of his congregation to New England. McGregor and most of those who travelled with him settled in New Hampshire, founding a town they renamed Londonderry.
- 15) Belfast, County Antrim
The first United States Consul in Belfast was appointed in 1796, making Belfast the second oldest continuously operational US Consulate. The first Consul was James Holmes, a Belfast merchant involved in trade with America. The blue plaque is on McHugh's Bar and Restaurant, close to where Holmes had his office in Chichester Quay.
- 16) The Birches, County Armagh
A blue plaque was placed at The Birches, in north Armagh, at what was believed to be the ancestral home of Thomas 'Stonewall' Jackson, the distinguished Confederate general of the American Civil War (private property).
- 17) Bready, County Tyrone
From the Bready area of north Tyrone, Oliver Pollock became a successful merchant in America and is credited with devising the dollar sign. A blue plaque to Pollock was placed at the Sallus Centre in Bready.
- 18) Carrickfergus, County Antrim
An outstanding scholar who became one of the most influential mathematicians in America, Robert Adrain was born in Carrickfergus and left for America following the 1798 Rebellion in which he had taken part. A blue plaque has been placed on the town's library.
- 19) Deroran, County Tyrone
In the late 1600s a Buchanan family moved from Scotland to Deroran near Omagh. The US President James Buchanan sprang from this family. A blue plaque has been placed on one of the gate pillars of his ancestral home (private property).
- 20) Ramelton, County Donegal
Francis Makemie, regarded as the father of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, was born in the Fanad peninsula, north of Ramelton, c.1658. A blue plaque has been placed on The Old Meeting House in Ramelton.
- 21 & 22) Strabane, County Tyrone
John Dunlap, the printer of the American Declaration of Independence, was born in Meethingshoe Street, Strabane, where a blue plaque has been placed. Ezekiel Donnell, who gave $1m towards the founding of a library in New York is the subject of a blue plaque at Strabane's library.
- 23) Upperalands, County Londonderry
Charles Thomson, the Secretary of the Continental Congress from 1774 to 1789, was born at Gortade, Upperalands, in 1729. A blue plaque was placed on Gortade Cottage (private property).
- 24) Carrindonagh, County Donegal
Birthplace of John Wallace 'Captain Jack' Crawford, a close friend of the entertainer Buffalo Bill Cody. Crawford's war exploits and poetry made him a household name in America.

Matthew Thornton of Londonderry, named on the Memorial to the 56 Signers of the Declaration of Independence, Washington DC. A statue of President Andrew Jackson is beside the White House, one of President Ulysses S. Grant at Capitol Hill, and one of President James Buchanan at Meridian Hill Park.

EMIGRATION PORTS

As a port, Londonderry has played a huge role in Ulster's emigration history. Ships were sailing from the city to America as early as the second half of the 17th century. By the end of the 1600s Belfast was the premier port in Ulster and one of the largest in Ireland. From the 18th century it was a major port of departure for emigrants travelling to the New World.

As a port, Coleraine's history stretches back centuries. However, it is worth bearing in mind that transatlantic vessels frequently used Portrush even if the port of origin was listed in the records as Coleraine. The old harbour in Portrush has the so-called 'Pilgrim Steps', which are said to be the stone steps that emigrants used when boarding the small boats that took them out to the larger ocean-going ships anchored off the Skerries.

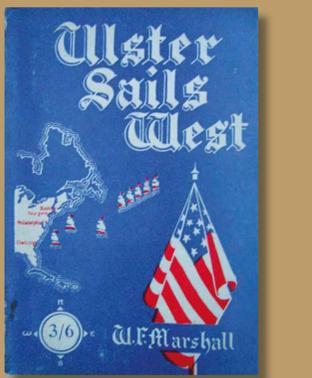

Larne was an important emigration port in the 1700s. Located in Curran Park in Larne is the Emigrants Memorial, which was unveiled in 1992. It was erected in memory of the ship Friens Goodwill which sailed from Larne to Boston in 1717 with 52 passengers on board. Newry was also an important port in transatlantic trade and many thousands emigrated from here to America and elsewhere. Its catchment area included much of south Down, south Armagh, Louth and Monaghan.

Other Ulster ports of embarkation for emigrants to the New World included Ballyshannon, Ballycastle, Donegal Town, Killybegs, Portaferry and Ramelton. In addition to these locations, many Ulster migrants departed from ports outside of the province, such as Dublin and Sligo.

In the nineteenth century ports in Britain, especially Liverpool, became increasingly important with many Ulster migrants crossing the Irish Sea to Merseyside before embarking upon ships bound for America. From the 1860s through to the Second World War, transatlantic liners sailing from Liverpool and Glasgow stopped at Millville in Lough Foyle, where emigrants boarded, having been brought from Londonderry on paddle steamers.

25) Larne, County Antrim Emigrants Memorial, Curran Park, Larne

Discover Scotch-Irish
Discover yourself.
www.DiscoverScotchIrish.com

Rev. W. F. Marshall's 1943 book Ulster Sails West tells the story of our transatlantic connections. It was published to coincide with American GI servicemen being stationed in Northern Ireland during World War Two.

1 Belfast Birthplace of Thomas M'Clintock (1745-1806), founder of one of the world's largest meat-packing plants in Cedar Rapids, Iowa

2 Dergenagh Birthplace of Rev. Francis Alison (1705-79), Presbyterian minister and educator, introduced the Scottish Enlightenment to America

3 Ballymoney The son of an immigrant from Ballymoney, Rev. George Saffell (1782-90), a Presbyterian minister in Philadelphia, became chaplain to the Continental Congress

4 Londonderry David Baird (1839-1927), Senator for New Jersey, was born near Londonderry

5 Ulster American Folk Park Thomas Mellon (1813-85), judge and banker in Pittsburgh, born in the Campbell Cottage in what is now the Folk Park

6 Antrim Probable birthplace of William Fitzsimons (1745-2006), Attorney General, Senator and Governor of New Jersey, and member of the US Army Supreme Court

7 Cahans In 1764 Rev. Thomas Clark (1708-92), minister of Cahans Presbyterian Church, led 300 Presbyterians to New York

8 Belfast Birthplace of Thomas M'Clintock (1745-1806), founder of one of the world's largest meat-packing plants in Cedar Rapids, Iowa

9 Glenveagh Birthplace of John George Adair (1765-1885), who at one time owned more land than anyone else born in Ireland

10 Larne Birthplace of James McHenry (1785-1845), who is considered the first Irish-American novelist. Headstone in St Cedra's churchyard

11 Ballymoney The son of an immigrant from Ballymoney, Rev. George Saffell (1782-90), a Presbyterian minister in Philadelphia, became chaplain to the Continental Congress

12 Londonderry David Baird (1839-1927), Senator for New Jersey, was born near Londonderry

13 Killybegs Rev. Thomas Wilson ministered here before emigrating to America in 1681. The first Presbyterian minister from Ireland to do so

14 Articlave Led by Rev. James Woodside, a section of the congregation of Dunree, Articlave, emigrated to New England in 1718, many of them ending up in Maine

15 Belfast Birthplace of Thomas M'Clintock (1745-1806), founder of one of the world's largest meat-packing plants in Cedar Rapids, Iowa

16 Dergenagh Birthplace of Rev. Francis Alison (1705-79), Presbyterian minister and educator, introduced the Scottish Enlightenment to America

17 Bready Oliver Pollock (1737-1823), wealthy merchant, Patriot and devisor of the dollar sign, born near here

18 Carrickfergus In 1765 Andrew Jackson's parents and other brothers left Ballyshannon on the outskirts of Carrickfergus

19 Omagh William Barton Rogers (1804-82), whose ancestral home was at Edergile, near Omagh, founded the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) in 1861

20 Ramelton Birthplace of Robert Rosser (1824-99), the owner of the New York Ledger and first President of the Scotch-Irish Society of America in 1889

21 Strabane Birthplace of John Dunlap (1746-1812), printer of the American Declaration of Independence

22 Maghera Rev. John Glendy (1755-1832), minister of Maghera Presbyterian Church, fled to America after the 1798 Rebellion; offered the chaplaincy of both the US House of Representatives and the Senate, but declined each

23 Upperalands Birthplace of Rev. Samuel McClure (1765-1949), who founded the first newspaper syndicate in America and was a pioneer of investigative journalism, was born at Frosses (Crosses) near Cloughmills

24 Carrindonagh Birthplace of John Wallace 'Captain Jack' Crawford, a close friend of the entertainer Buffalo Bill Cody. Crawford's war exploits and poetry made him a household name in America

25 Larne Birthplace of James McHenry (1785-1845), who is considered the first Irish-American novelist. Headstone in St Cedra's churchyard

26 Ballybeg The forebears of Sam Houston, the President of the Republic of Texas, lived at Ballybeg/Ballybracken, plaque at Ballybeg Forest

27 Ballymoney The son of an immigrant from Ballymoney, Rev. George Saffell (1782-90), a Presbyterian minister in Philadelphia, became chaplain to the Continental Congress

28 Spout Road Dergalt, Strabane, BT22 8NB

The Memorial to the 56 Signers of the Declaration of Independence was unveiled in 1992. It was erected in memory of the ship Friens Goodwill which sailed from Larne to Boston in 1717 with 52 passengers on board.